SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION:

I. Abstract

NIST seeks to assess economic impacts of its program for near-field measurements of antennas. The respondents will be U.S. suppliers and users of microwave antennas used in satellites, earth terminals, radar and communications systems. The results will be applied by NIST for program evaluation purposes.

NIST conducts economic impact studies to (1) provide management with information on the nature and magnitude of NIST research projects, (2) to convey to the policy and budget processes the rates of return to society for expenditures by NIST, and (3) to provide data necessary to comply with the Government Performance and Results Act requirements. The resulting information is used both for evaluation of completed and ongoing research and related projects and for strategic planning.

The range of technology infrastructure developed in NIST laboratories and through cooperative projects with industry leverage the productivity of all stages of U.S. domestic economic activity (R&D, production, and marketing) and thereby increase economic growth and economic well being.

II. Method of Collection

Personnel of organizations in the U.S. microwave industry may respond to questionnaires by mail, fax, E-mail, or telephone.
